Students protesting Western XXI report

By GARY HOUCHEMS
and CHRIS POYNTER

Members of the Western XXI committee were motionless as about 20 public relations students raised two dozen plaques and trophies and began to fire off a list of awards their organization has won.

The students showed up at a public forum yesterday to protest the ranking of the public relations program as tertiary in importance to the university's vision.

About 100 people attended the forum to air their concerns about the Western XXI report released last Monday.

The second public hearing is this afternoon at 3 in Page Hall Auditorium.

The report classified each area of the university in three categories — primary, secondary, tertiary — reflecting their importance to the future of the university as it enters the 21st century.

Sixteen people who wanted to speak signed a list as they walked in and were called to the microphone in that order. Most of the speakers were representing the tertiary category.

Though Western XXI was released more than a week ago, some of the people the report affects most still don't know what it is, said a member of Associated Student Government.

"Students have no idea what is going on," said

Heather Falmlen, administrative vice-president of ASG.

"The faculty and administration are not Western, the students are," Falmlen said. "If not for the students, they wouldn't be here."

Howard Bailey, dean of Student Life, said the average

Three-year-old Casey Morris thinks her mother's friend, Michelle Muir, or "Chelle," as she calls her, is on a vacation.

And she doesn't understand why her mother bought a yellow ribbon last Friday to hang on their front door.

"I told her we would leave the ribbon up until Michelle got back," said Cindy Morris, secretary for Howard Bailey, dean of Student Life.

Muir, a secretary in the university attorney's office, was contacted Sept. 15 by her commanding officer in the Air National Guard and told she would depart for the Persian Gulf two days later. A member of the Guard's medical team, she is the only full-time Western employee who has been sent.

She's taking six undergraduate courses and is a semester away from graduation.

Morris said Muir, 30, had spoken to her the day before she was contacted to report for duty.

When Muir's commanding officer called in August, Morris said she asked him, "Are you asking me if I want to volunteer?" and he replied, "No, I'm asking you when you can go."

She said she would go next January or February after finals.

She "had no qualms about going," Morris said. "She didn't really talk about it much, but said if they called her number she'd go."

Friends of Muir have already begun to send her letters and care packages. The office staff at Potter Hall, where Muir works, has sent cards, and Morris said she is mailing a box this week that includes a book, a tape player and cassette tapes with messages and favorite songs.

But this isn't the only way Muir's friends want to help. Sixteen Western employees submitted a petition to Personnel Services last Thursday asking to give up their vacation days — a total of 65 — so Muir, a 10-year Western employee, can stay on the university payroll.

"She's there defending us and our welfare and we felt that it was the least that we could do," Bailey said. The employees who offered vacation days range from mid-management administrators to custodial workers, he said.

The petition was organized after researching the personnel manual, Bailey said. "We didn't find anything that was against it, so we felt that we should have the liberty to make this."

Bailey said he hasn't received a response from Personnel, but is "anxiously awaiting."

Michael Dale, interim director of Personnel Services, said he is reviewing the petition now and that he will probably review it with executive vice president Paul Cook. He said he hopes to make a decision soon.

Muir's roommate, Phyllis Johnson, said Muir was surprised when she received departure orders, but knew she would be sent eventually.

"We had a ritual in the morning of getting up and watching the ABC network," Johnson

Miller new freshman president

Mark Miller captured the freshman election yesterday by more than 60 votes.

Miller, of Elizabethtown, picked up 206 votes while his opponent, Tanya Gipson of Earlinton, received 139 votes.

Amos Gott, Associated Student Government judicial council chairman, said about 350 students participated in yesterday's election for freshman officers and representatives.

In the vice presidential election, Jill Harris, of Owensboro, garnered 172 votes to defeat Todd Dykes, an Ashland student who got 162 votes.

The following each won a seat on ASG as a class representative: Melissa Baggerly, Centertown; Derrick Holt, Dickson, Tenn.; Julie Kwok, Bowling Green; and Robey Harris, Franklin.

Because of a tie between two candidates running for representative, a run-off election will be held next Tuesday between 11 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. Jennifer May, of Louisville, and Heather Hauer, of Scottsburg, Ind., will be the candidates after receiving 148 votes each.

Homecoming events kick off

The planning is over. The celebration is beginning.

For Gene Crume, special events coordinator, work which started a year ago culminates this week in a myriad of Homecoming activities.

Ron Beck, Alumni Affairs associate director, said the extended planning that started after last year's Homecoming gives organizers a chance to consider the events while they're still fresh.

At 6 tonight, the Homecoming queen candidates will participate in a fashion show at the Greenwood Mall.

Tomorrow, guitarist David Kelsey of the music department will entertain students at noon in the university center.

The Topperettes will perform at 6 and 8 p.m. at the Greenwood Mall. A "Meet the Team" autograph session will be from 7 to 8 p.m. tomorrow and Thursday nights.

The faculty jazz ensemble will perform during lunch Thursday at the university center.

The evening will end with a concert by The Romantics along with Nervous Melvin and the Mistakes at 8 p.m. in Garrett Ballroom.

The chamber singers will perform during lunch Friday in the university center lobby.

Big Red's Roar will live up the evening at 7 in the fine arts center amphitheater.

From 2:30 until 5 p.m. Saturday, some departments and organizations will gather at the Festival of Friends on the south lawn of the university center where food will be served. Jack Pearson and the Nationals will provide entertainment.

Homecoming weekend will close with Western facing Youngstown State at 5:30 p.m. at Smith Stadium.

Muir called Johnson last Saturday from Germany and said she will be home in two weeks if war doesn't break out. She will return early next year to do volunteer work if conditions in the Gulf remain the same.

Johnson also received a letter from Muir last Thursday.

She wrote that she admires "people who are doing this as a career." She writes that overall, after maneuvers and training, it's "pretty boring over there," Johnson said.

Coupon clippers cut costs

By AMY HOOVER

The tattered remains of a newspaper insert sail across the room to join the rest of the day's rejections. As the pile of hole-riddled paper grows, so does the stack of neatly-clipped coupons next to it.

"Ah, cereal," Lena May said, spotting a 50-cent-off coupon for Fruit Loops. She grabs her scissors and continues her weekly coupon quest.

The Elizabethtown junior is one of a growing number of students who mutilate newspapers and magazines in search of cost-cutting coupons.

"Shoppers can save at least 25 percent if they work at it," said David Hanner, a Kroger store manager.

Miguel Castro buys Sunday and Wednesday newspapers for the coupons which save him hundreds of dollars a year, he said.

"I can save $20 to $25 per week," said the junior from Berwind Estates, Puerto Rico, who totes coupons on every store trip.

Students also rack up savings by using restaurant coupons.

"It saves a lot of money," said Lebanon senior Alecia Craighead, who uses mostly restaurant coupons. "The average student is skimpy on money — every cent counts."

Craighead said she doesn't have to have a coupon to go to a specific restaurant, but "it influences my decision."

Coupons also influence grocery shoppers.

Both Kroger and Houchens double the value of coupons worth up to 50 cents for everything except alcohol and tobacco products.

"More people have started using coupons due to doubling," said Nelda Bromley, an office manager at Houchens. "I notice that when we put coupons in the student paper they use them quite a bit."

One voice

Group would represent staff concerns

By ROB WEBER

President Thomas Meredith has recommended formation of an organization that would give staff members a way to voice their concerns to the administration.

Since the faculty is represented by the Faculty Senate, it seems appropriate to have an organization representing the staff, Meredith said.

There are 1,038 full-time staff members at Western and 564 full-time faculty members, said Mike Dale, Personnel Services director.

"I want to make sure they have a way to represent themselves," Meredith said.

Faculty Senate Chairman Bart White said the idea for the organization came about last spring when he and three physical plant employees met with Meredith to discuss the rising price of health insurance.

"Meredith was receptive to the idea at that time, and I think he's always been receptive to it," said White, a communications and broadcasting associate professor.

"I'd like to see it happen," White said. "Staff people don't always have a unified voice."

White said he couldn't predict whether a staff organization would increase the probability of a union being formed for staffers, but a staff organization would allow staffers to compile union information.

Earl Garrett, assistant supervisor for the plumbing department, said he'd also like to see the organization formed.

"The staff people lower down should have a say so," Garrett said. "They should be able to talk amongst themselves and have some input."

Martha Jones, building service attendant, said she considers forming a staff organization a "great idea" and would like to see the organization discuss staff raises, better insurance rates and additional parking for staff members.

Lee Murray, director of University Centers, agreed that the organization would be beneficial. "The student body and faculty have a regent. I'd like to see the staff have a body" to voice concerns to the administration.

Kemble Johnson, Physical Plant director, said he thinks such a group would be a good idea because "right now, no one but the faculty has representation. No one can voice the concerns of the staff."

Meredith said staff members can always voice their concerns by writing or visiting him or any executive officer, but there should be "an avenue for the staff to formally have a way to advise me regarding staff concerns."

White said a staff organization would probably concentrate on "issues of status and welfare — namely salary and benefits."

It hasn't been determined exactly who would make up the organization, Meredith said. But he has gathered information on staff organizations at other universities and found that the makeup of the organizations vary.

"I think you need to have a wide representation and need to find a way to assure that you had representation of all areas," Johnson said.

Opinion

Staff needs better representation

Pam Ogelvie's voice quivered yesterday as she stood before about 100 faculty members at the Western XXI forum and asked that people listen to the concerns of staff members.

"I'm not used to making speeches," the shuttle bus driver said.

But she bravely expressed what 1,038 full-time staff members at Western have probably been feeling.

They need better representation.

"I'm asking for more consideration to be given to our voice, our opinions, our ideas, and ways we can be happier in our work and thus be more productive," Ogel-vie said.

She went on to speak about other staff concerns. And when she finished, people applauded.

Ogelvie said she decided to come to the forum because Western XXI is personally affecting her, and "there are other employees in the same position."

She was the only person at the forum who spoke on behalf of the staff. Most of her co-workers were absent from the forum, she said, because they "feel like nobody will listen to them."

It's about time administrators lent an ear.

President Thomas Meredith has recommended formation of an organization that would give staff members a way to voice their concerns.

That's exactly what they need.

Staff members can't be represented well by the Faculty Senate because their concerns are different.

And the number of full-time staff members is double that of full-time faculty. Staff people need a unified voice.

"It's America," Ogelvie said. "I live in America. Why can't there be some type of committee to give us some type of input? Not that we want to stomp our feet — we would just like to have someone listen."

And administrators should listen now. Not in the 21st century.

Western XXI ignores PR

In the Western XXI report, the public relations sequence was given low priority, being put in the "tertiary maintain category. It seems very strange to me that a nationally acclaimed program could be so unrecognized on its own campus.

Public relations professionals and students from New York, Arizona and Chicago acknowledge Western's PR sequence as one of the best in the country, but to our own university we are a third-rate program it merely wants to maintain.

I came to Western specifically for the public relations program. After becoming active in the Kelly Thompson chapter of the Public Relations Society of America, I began to realize how well-respected our program is across the country.

In 1985, the public relations student chapter was named the best in the nation out of 160 chapters and more than 5,000 students. Western's chapter has had six students elected to national officers in the past five years.

Our program competed in a public relations competition last year based on the knowledge and capabilities of students and won second place in the nation, a $1,200 award.

I hope more research is put into the next "draft" of Western XXI. It is evident that the PR sequence does a great job of gaining recognition for the journalism department and Western, and of preparing students to enter the competitive market of public relations. Think about it.

Commentary 'out of line'

I am writing in response to Gary Houchens' commentary on the buildup in the Gulf.

In the commentary, Mr. Houchens said he "felt very sick" after realizing what he thought was the reason for the buildup in the Gulf. I felt very sick after reading his commentary.

I recently spent three months earning the title Marine. I resent anyone implying that I am nothing more than an "international rent-a-cop."

Mr. Houchens even questions America's ability as a fighting force. The United States has the most highly trained, best-equipped armed forces in the world. Anyone who believes otherwise is just plain wrong.

Mr. Houchens said his friend was Galbraith's fuel home-grown

In case you haven't noticed, the race for the Democratic nomination for governor is on.

The candidates are Lt. Gov. Brereton Jones, first lady Martha Wilkinson, Lexington mayor Scotty Baesler, Dr. Floyd Poore and Gatewood Galbraith.

The first four are all fueling their drive with money. All have raised more than $700,000 and Jones has raised $2 million.

Galbraith is also fueling his drive with green stuff—hemp—more commonly known as marijuana.

Galbraith, a 43-year-old Lexington attorney, is running on a platform of legalizing marijuana. He said it should be legalized for a number of reasons:

- Marijuana is a cash crop that could be a billion-dollar industry for the state and Kentucky farmers.

- It would help out with drug control. Galbraith said marijuana smokers are separate from the hard drug users, and the best way to regulate them is to tax them heavily.

- Hemp can be used as a substitute for petroleum and cut the United States reliance on foreign oil.

To show how hemp can be

used as a substitute fuel, Galbraith and country music star Willie Nelson will drive Galbraith's "hempmobile" from Ashland to Louisville utilizing a mixture of diesel fuel and hemp oil.

Nelson is playing a benefit concert Oct. 14 in Louisville.

Even though Galbraith has only raised about $75,000 and wasn't even mentioned in a Bluegrass State Poll taken by The Courier-Journal last week, he remains very confident.

"I'm so far ahead of them that they can't see my dust."

Galbraith has already planned his first day in office.

"I'm going to ground every helicopter the state owns," he said. "This is Kentucky, not Afghanistan. Instead of having the National Guard destroy marijuana, I'm going to have them looking for illegal dumps."

While those statements might be a little premature, Galbraith at least has some original ideas.

He wants to have a international sweepstakes on the Kentucky Derby, and he also has some ideas on education. His education goals are a hot breakfast for every child and to start having civics class in the third grade.

He also has some original fund-raising techniques.

Besides the Nelson concert, Galbraith has established a 1-900 number. When people call the number they immediately make a $10 donation.

Gatewood Galbraith is the longest of long shots for the Democratic nomination for governor. His ideas aren't even close to being in the mainstream and they probably won't go over well in this conservative Bible Belt state.

His campaign chest is of the pill box size compared to his competitors' and he's not running any television advertising.

He's definitely not your typical candidate for governor.

That might be the best thing he has going for him.

scared about the prospect of going to the Persian Gulf. Who wouldn't be scared of going to a place where they could possibly be killed? But to imply that America's leaders are willing to trade soldiers' lives for oil is way out of line.

Saddam Hussein, with his million man army, poses a threat not only to American interests, but also to our way of life. Would Mr. Houchens prefer an America on its knees to the whims of a man like Saddam Hussein? How about supporting your friend, and thousands of men and women like him, Mr. Houchens, instead of second-guessing them.

System has flaws

I am writing this letter so that I might bring to the attention of the administration that their new fee payment system has a few bugs that need to be worked out.

During the summer I was notified that I would receive a sufficient amount of financial aid during the coming year. I still have not received all of my aid. The Financial Aid office's excuse is that they have not been sent the money. I believed them for the first month. After being told that it would only be two more weeks, for the fourth time, I began to wonder if this was true.

I, along with many other students, have been given the royal runaround for the past month. If Western has the infinite wisdom to institute a new system, then they should have the wisdom to run it properly.

Many independent students, such as myself, depend on the aid money to buy books and supplies for the upcoming semester. Under the old system this was not a problem. It has always taken a couple of weeks to get the money disbursed, but never quite this long.

I don't mean to whine or cry, but why can't Western get on the ball and stop making excuses? In my opinion, this matter should be treated as an urgent one. Instead of arguing about which department is the most over-worked, why not put this energy into serving the students? After all, we are paying your salaries indirectly.

Gulf peace possible

Professor George Masannat may be correct in judging that there is little probability of a peaceful resolution to the Iraq-Kuwait crisis. I take issue, however, with the more extreme position implicit in the statements attributed to him that there is no possibility for a peaceful resolution.

No doubt, Iraq has violated Kuwait's right to self-determination, a violation all decent people should oppose. Nevertheless, the status of northeastern Kuwait (including the islands of Bubiyan and Warbah), which Iraq especially wants and has incorporated into the province of Basra, is less clear. There is no reason in principle that it could not be negotiated. Saddam Hussein will not back down unless he can save face and this might provide an opportunity.

In any case, the United Nations or a broad united front of existing states in the region provides the only legitimate framework for external military pressure on Hussein. George Bush should not be given any license for military adventurism in the region. His behavior last year in Panama shows that he is capable of it.

Business key to Soviet lecture

By TANYA BRICKING

Larry Caillouet will be heading for Georgia next week to give a series of lectures at a university. But he'll be going out of the United States to get there.

The communication and broadcasting association professor will be going to Tbilisi State University in the Soviet Socialist Republic of Georgia from Oct. 11 to 21 to speak about business communication.

"It's an exciting time to go," Caillouet said. "There are things in the paper every day about the Soviet structure and economy."

"I'm going to be talking about effective management and communication styles and about using performance appraisals as a tool for excellence," he said. "I'll also be talking about communication and satisfaction with work life."

Caillouet said the Soviet school's interest in business had increased because the country officially switched from a controlled economy to a free market system.

So during the summer he applied to the Soviet branch of the World Laboratory because the education system was looking for professors to speak about communication relating to business and industry.

He received an invitation in early September to speak to students and professors in Tbilisi. A professor from Florida and one from Texas also will be on the trip to discuss business topics.

"The Republic of Georgia is fairly well-oriented with business," Caillouet said. "And I've been told that the Georgian people are very hospitable."

While he's gone, his classes at Western will be covered by other professors in the department.

Caillouet said in the past few years he's spoken to groups at the University of Michigan, Memphis State University, Marshall University and Kansas State, but not to foreign groups.

And he doesn't know much Russian, so an interpreter will translate his lectures.

"Hugh Phillips in the history department has taught me a few phrases like 'Where's the bathroom?' but that's about all I know."

Phillips, an assistant professor who specializes in Russian history, said Caillouet will probably be around people who know English, but "I just taught him a few basic phrases."

Program teaches kids creativity

The music blared in Garrett Ballroom. "Stop! Hammer time. And you know you can't touch this."

Cave City resident Sammie Gentry smiled as he heard his favorite M.C. Hammer song. Leaving unfinished lunches scattered on the floor, the people responded to the music and started doing the Hammer dance.

It was lunchtime at the eighth annual Very Special Arts program Friday for 160 special education and handicapped people, ranging in age from 6 to 20, who came from five counties for the activities.

There were 16 workshops, four each in dance, visual arts, music and drama.

"This is a non-competitive environment where these children can express themselves and experience the arts," Miller said.

Activities included learning dance steps, making their own creations with tissue paper, glue and scraps of all kinds of materials and putting on their own play.

The workshops are run by volunteer artists from the area and are sponsored by the Capitol Arts Center, Miller said.

"This is the artistic equivalent to the Special Olympics," said Mark Troutman, a volunteer and Bowling Green graduate student.

Shawnetta Price from L.C. Curry Elementary School showed off a necklace she made during an art workshop.

"We got to make the stuff ourselves and we get to keep it."

ASG leaders urge students to scrutinize report

student isn't well informed about the report.

"While some students were involved in the formation, it has been difficult for students to maintain hands-on contact because most of the work took place over the summer," Bailey said.

Dwight Adkins, a Catlettburg senior, was on the steering committee.

The report hasn't been advertised much outside of the media,

Bailey said. "It's not the type of procedure that would attract interest from the average reader, but it will have an impact on students."

ASG President Michael Colvin said, "If students care, they will read the document, (but) most students don't know what's in it or what it's about."

"That concerns me a lot," he added.

President Thomas Meredith said students weren't forgotten in the planning process. "During the process, it was remembered that they're what we are all about."

But Ty Craig, an Elizabethtown senior, said he doesn't like the idea of administrators deciding how money is to be spent without student input.

"The students are the first to pay money and the last to find out," he said. "That's not fair."

However, "it is the student responsibility to educate themselves," Falmien said.

Freshmen and sophomores especially need to be aware of the report because they will be around to see some of the ideas implemented, Falmien said.

The document is complex and has the presumption that the reader understands the academic setting, said Jim Flynn, chairman of the Western XXI Steering Committee. "It's difficult for students to understand."

"The best thing for students to do is look at the document and make their reactions known," Flynn said.

Copies of Western XXI are available in the ASG office on the first floor of the Downing University Center and each of the dean's offices.

If students have suggestions for the Western XXI steering committee, they can submit them in writing to the Budget and Planning Office in Wetherby Administration Building, Room 109, by 4:30 p.m. today, Flynn said.

Recycling projects on campus hit or miss

By CHRISTINE TAYLOR

One campus group is finding it hard to live by the motto, "Don't throw it away, recycle it."

Sigma Tau Delta, the English honor society, began a program last spring to recycle white office paper, but the program failed before it had much of a chance to succeed.

"No company is presently purchasing white paper," said Walker Rutledge, English professor and honor society adviser. "It's very discouraging. It's a tremendous waste of paper."

Other groups on campus that recycle are not having as many problems because they collect a variety of items.

■ An Associated Student Government committee gathers aluminum cans, newspaper and glass. Anyone can join the group, which meets at 7 p.m. Mondays in the ASG office in the Downing University Center basement.

One of the committee's first projects is to put boxes for items they're collecting in one of the dorms to see what the response is, according to committee chairman Sheri Lucas. If the program is successful, they may add other types of garbage.

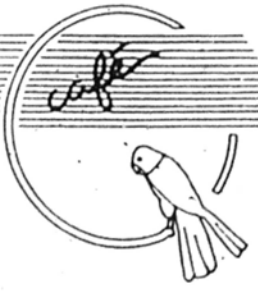

■ Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity is going to bring the Monarch Environmental Caravan to the south lawn of the university center every other Thursday starting this week. Students can bring newspaper, computer paper, aluminum cans, clear and green glass and recyclable plastic grocery bags.

■ United Student Activists held the third Trash Bash Friday on the south lawn of the university center. They also pick up extra Heralds around campus every Monday to recycle them, said Carrie Ransom, vice president.

Scuba divers go off the deep end

By BRUCE VINCENT

Five scuba-clad explorers darted through the pale blue depths of Diddle Pool.

They struggled to perform a series of underwater tasks on the pool floor as their instructor swam above with hands crossed behind his back, scrutinizing their every move.

The divers were completing their final pool assignment in a five-session scuba course offered by the Recreational Activities office.

"A majority of people become interested in scuba diving after seeing it on television," instructor Alan Cash said. "Many people see diving as going to an extraterrestrial world. It's a lot better than a walk through the woods."

Cash, who owns Global Adventures Scuba at 2708 Scottsville Roa, has taught scuba at Western for three years, after receiving a degree in sport diving operations from the Florida Institute of Technology in 1987.

Scott Franks, a Madisonville freshman, said he has always wanted to scuba dive.

"If everything works out, I would like to be a diver for the Coast Guard," Franks said. "I would love to be stationed in the Caribbean."

Franks and four other diving students have spent their Tuesday and Thursday nights for the past three weeks trying to become certified divers. Students who successfully complete the course are certified by the Professional Association of Diving Instructors.

The class met four hours each night with two hours devoted to learning diving skills and two hours of pool practice. For safety reasons, all scuba gear must be serviced annually and no more than eight divers are allowed in the pool at a time, Cash said.

"Due to the number of rules, sport diving is a very safe sport," Cash said. "We teach our students to never put themselves into a position where they do not have direct access to the surface."

The only potentially dangerous situation Cash encountered was teaching two students who did not know how to swim. Cash advised the students to drop the class and take swimming lessons.

"We just don't have the time to teach everyone to swim," Cash said.

Everyone who takes the course must pass the swimming test and learn how to use the equipment before learning to dive.

"The swim test was definitely the hardest part of the class," said Russellville junior Rodney Skipworth. "We had to swim 200 yards and tread water for 10 minutes. I was about to go under and the girls were just laughing and talking."

Although learning to breathe underwater was difficult, Mayfield senior Valerie Grantham

Steve Smart/Herald

said she had a different problem while learning to dive.

"Getting into the suit is the hardest part," Grantham said as she struggled with her gear.

After 10 minutes of grappling with 50 pounds of equipment each, the students filed to the deep end of the pool where they awaited Cash's signal.

After Cash gave a short explanation of the night's objectives, the divers stepped into the pool.

The students slowly swam to the bottom of the pool where they practiced removing their weight belts and taking off their air tanks while keeping the air hose in their mouths.

Between exercises, Skipworth circled unsuspecting students from below and removed their fins.

"Rodney is definitely the class clown," said Grantham as she searched for her missing fin.

At the end of class, the students congratulated each other while posing for a group picture. They will travel this weekend to Lake Cumberland for the final session, where they will attempt their first open water dive.

Cash said Lake Cumberland is one of the best places in the area to dive.

"If the conditions are right, we will have 20- to 25-foot visibility," Cash said.

Work on the Preston Health and Activities Center gets under way in a small way during ground breaking ceremonies. Turning dirt Friday were (front) Michael Colvin, Associated Student Government president, Joe Iacane, chairman of the Board of Regents, Hattie and Raymond Preston, major contributors to the project, President Thomas Meredith, and regent Denny Wedge.

Shovels get center under way

By NOELLE PHILLIPS

President Thomas Meredith counted "one, two, three, turn" and he and eight other people thrust shovels in the dirt, lifted up a chunk of earth and pitched it to the left.

When they brought their shovels from the dirt, ground had been broken for the Preston Health and Activities Center, kicking off an 18-month, $10 million construction project.

As Western's marching band broke into the school fight song, Hattie Preston sang along, clapping her hands and tapping her foot.

"I always did love it," said Preston, a Western graduate. "It was the first thing I learned when I came here in 1937."

She looked at her son, Kent, and said, "I bet I know more of the words than you do."

Kent, a Henderson sophomore, said, "Mom, I know the words, but we changed them, and they're dirty now."

After Hattie laughed, he said, "Just kidding, Mom."

Raymond B. Preston and his wife, Hattie, donated an estimated $800,000 last June toward the center. Kent is their youngest son.

Kent said he considers himself no different from any other student because his father made the donation. "I like to socialize, party and have a beer every now and then just like everyone else does."

The Prestons' donation in June was the largest in Western's history. It pushed Western over the top in raising money to cover half of the first year's debt service on the building.

Kentucky's General Assembly agreed to give Western $8 million if the school could cover the cost of the first year's debt service.

The donation was made through the Preston Family Foundation. The foundation was established to support charitable causes that interest the family, Raymond said. The foundation usually donates to private schools.

Raymond was a chemistry major at Western and is founder, president and chairman of the board of PB&S Chemical in Henderson. He said he wanted to give something back to Western.

The center will include a human performance laboratory that will evaluate the physical fitness of students. There will be tests for body fat, blood analysis, respiratory testing, flexibility assessment and muscle strength and endurance testing.

The center also will have an indoor swimming pool with diving platforms, racquetball courts, weight rooms and aerobic dance rooms. There will be a super gym with separate units for basketball, volleyball and tennis.

Indictment returned in car theft on campus

Herald staff report

Police have arrested a Nashville man on charges relating to a car theft on campus.

Campus police have obtained an arrest warrant for Darren Lamont Hardemon, 20. Hardemon is held in Davidson County (Tenn.) Jail on unrelated charges of aggravated assault and resisting an officer.

Police charged Hardemon with stealing a car owned by Kelly Jean Davis of Rodes-Harlin Hall. Valued at $8,500, the car was stolen Sept. 17 from the fourth level of the parking structure, police said.

Davis' mother made a phone call to a mobile telephone in the car and the suspect answered. She demanded the return of the car and told the man police were looking for him, Lt. Richard Kirby said.

The car was recovered Sept. 20 in Nashville. The tires and wheels were missing, and about $3,000 damage was done to the interior, Kirby said.

Police also say Hardemon will be questioned about a series of auto thefts in the Nashville area.

Professor says social institutions repress today's women

By LAUREN YATES

Patricia Hill Collins said she didn't learn about racism, sexism and classism until she went to Harvard.

She asked members of the audience at her speech for the Women's Study Conference luncheon Thursday to remember what they were like when they were 5 years old — when race, sex and income didn't matter.

When she was 5, she said whatever she felt.

But that changed later in her life.

"I realized the patterns of exclusion and distortion in social institutions... I didn't feel like I belonged."

She remembered her Harvard sociology class, when a professor asked how many of the students' parents made more than $35,000. Ninety percent of the students raised their hands.

She said she was surprised because that was four times what her dad made.

The main subjects of Collins' speech included the power of self-definition, self-respect, self-independence, self-change and empowerment. She said that without self-definition, a woman begins to doubt herself instead of doubting the social institutions that have repressed her.

Collins is an associate professor of Afro-American Studies at the University of Cincinnati and has recently written a book titled, "Black Feminist Thought: Knowledge, Consciousness and the Politics of Empowerment."

She spoke of her childhood in Philadelphia in a low-income neighborhood, where she was raised by other black women who taught her to be herself.

"I had to go to college to find out I came from a low-income family," she said.

Collins said it is important for people to know that even though there are only a few black women idolized in history, there are many everyday black women who are making progress in black feminist thought.

Collins' speech was one of the highlights of the three-day conference.

Power outage Friday creates commotion

By JOHN MARTIN

A blackout Friday night came at a bad time for Don Knarr.

Knarr, a senior from Chicago, and Tom English, a Louisville junior, sponsored a rock concert featuring Tall Paul at the National Guard Armory Friday. About 800 people were on hand just before 11 p.m.

Then the lights went out.

"It really stunk," Knarr said. "It just messed up the whole night. Probably 500 more would have come if the lights hadn't gone out."

Beth Bolin, Poland Hall director, said the blackout caused commotion in her dorm.

"There was a lot of confusion," she said. "Everyone was coming in from work and the like. We have 24-hour visitation, though, so there were no problems with couples upstairs."

Bolin said students in Central

Hall and Downing University Center got stuck in elevators when the power went out.

The blackout was caused by birds getting inside the main breaker at a power station on Russellville Road, said Charles Gandy, assistant manager of electronics at Bowling Green Municipal Utilities.

The station feeds two of the three substations that serve campus. The lights went out at 10:56 p.m. and came back on at 12:12 a.m. Saturday.

Telephone service was also out in the area because an emergency generator, located at Van Meter Hall, didn't come on when the power went out, said Kemble Johnson, Physical Plant director. The battery in the generator was probably dead, he said. Phone service was restored about the same time as the electricity was.

Report hits athletic spending

By DOUG TATUM

During the past year a volley of reports has been served concerning athletic spending.

The Faculty Senate shot first with its report saying athletics was taking too much money from the university without generating enough benefits.

Three economics professors responded with a report saying university athletics generates money for Western.

Now, the Western XXI report has served up concerns of its own.

The report said athletic expenditures that drain Western's resources should be curtailed and priorities should be established.

Athletic director Jimmy Feix said he was pleased that a group without any self interests looked at the situation and made recommendations.

"I feel very confident that eventually it will be felt that the programs are of extreme value to the university," he said.

History professor Charles Bussey, one of three authors of the senate report, said he was encouraged.

The report said men's and women's basketball should receive the main emphasis among Western's sports.

Women's basketball coach Paul Sanderford said his sport was probably picked because it has been so successful.

"Women's basketball is one of the sports that we have a chance of winning the national championship," he said.

The Lady Toppers have been to the NCAA Tournament the last six seasons and have made two Final Four appearances.

Feix said that because both basketball teams are already fully funded, they probably won't be getting more money. But if a decision is made to reduce spending, they won't be affected.

Any decision to reduce funding for a sport would be made by President Thomas Meredith and the Board of Regents, Feix said.

Football coach Jack Harbaugh would not comment on the report.

The report also said Western should review its affiliation with the Sun Belt Conference. Feix said he is pleased with the Sun Belt.

And though football is not a sport in the Sun Belt, Feix said being independent in football hasn't hurt Western financially.

The Sun Belt, which is losing Old Dominion as a conference member, is looking to add teams, Feix said. He said if the Metro Conference disbands — it has just lost two teams — the Sun Belt might try to pick up some of its members.

The University Athletic Committee and the Hilltopper Athletic Foundation also need to be reviewed, the report said.

The committee reviews schedules, makes sure the athletic department follows NCAA rules and makes recommendations to the president, Feix said.

The athletic committee, made up of faculty, staff and students, was already going to review itself, Chairman Paul Cook said.

The Hilltopper Athletic Foundation is an outside fundraiser for the athletic department.

Foundation president Gary West said Western XXI's recommendation to bring the foundation into close coordination with Western's development program won't have an immediate impact.

West said the foundation already meets monthly with the development office.

Western XXI chairman Jim Flynn listens to comments from public relations Professor Bob Blann during a forum yesterday at the Garrett Conference Center.

Evansville, Ind., said the accomplishments of Western public relations students show that the program should be important to the university.

"I believe our track record speaks for itself," Carmack said. "From a student's viewpoint, I strongly urge you to reassess the ranking of our program."

Students were not the only ones to voice concerns.

John Russell, an engineering and technology professor, said the committee's recommendations are flawed because they based them on the belief that the university would never receive additional funds.

"We can see the beginnings of squabbling over crumbs," he said. So "I'm here to make a plea with the steering committee to be true to their own words, to be boldly creative in deed, rather than just word."

Several people said they were speaking on behalf of departments other than their own.

Conrad Moore, a geography and geology professor, spoke in support of Western's health programs, most of which received tertiary rankings.

"The vision statement refers to Henry Hardin Cherry's promise of 'Life, More Life,'" Moore said. "But the Western XXI document indicates 'health, less health.'"

Moore said he has experienced first-hand the detrimental effects of prioritizing academic programs.

As a professor at Nashville's George Peabody College in the 1970s, he witnessed a strategic plan "nearly identical" to Western XXI that led to departmental quarreling.

"There was so much bickering and back-biting about those in the third category that eventually most of us felt that, by God, they are third-class," Moore said. "So when they were terminated later, nobody said anything."

Moore said Peabody was eventually made a division of Vanderbilt University.

Pam Ogelvie, a shuttle bus driver, was the only staff member who spoke at the forum.

She said staff members should have a bigger say in administrative decisions and broader opportunities for pursuing a college degree at Western.

"I'm asking for more consideration for our voice, our opinions and ways we can be happier in our work and thus be more productive," Ogelvie said.

"Do we want employees aiming for higher education or are we better off without them?" she asked. "If they are important to us, then what are we going to do to help them?"

Most of the speakers complained that they weren't given enough time to review the Western XXI report and respond to it and they questioned the methods used to rank each department.

Jim Flynn, steering committee chairman, said the speakers made good points, and he "wouldn't be surprised" if some of their suggestions led to changes in the committee's recommendations.

Flynn added that although many faculty were upset, prioritizing is something administrators do every day.

The steering committee will review transcripts of the forum and written responses tomorrow before presenting its final recommendations to the Board of Regents, which is scheduled to approve or reject the recommendations at a meeting Monday.

Donisi's foot not enough for Tops

By DONNIE SWINEY

It all happened so fast. Kicker Steve Donisi had put Western ahead 12-7 with his fourth field goal of the game, with 5:11 left in the third quarter.

FOOTBALL

Then Eastern exploded, scoring 28 unanswered points in the last 18 minutes to beat the Toppers 35-12.

Fullback Tim Lester put Eastern (4-0) up 14-12 when he dived in from one-yard out with 2:42 remaining in the third and the Colonels never looked back. As 18,000 fans Saturday night at Smith Stadium watched, Eastern won for the first time here since 1982.

Lester's score capped a seven-play, 73-yard drive that took just 2:21 off the clock. The key play of the drive was quarterback Lorenzo Fields' 39-yard run to the Western two-yard line.

The Toppers' defense didn't get much rest as Eastern free safety Chris Brooks intercepted a Scott Campbell pass on Western's next play from scrimmage. The Colonels then went 41 yards on three plays and scored when Markus Thomas went in from two yards.

Again, Western's tiring defense gave up the big play, a 27-yard run by Leon Brown that set up the score.

Western's Chris Brooks (foreground) and Terrell Griffin realize Western is about to lose to Eastern for the third straight time Saturday. The final score was 35-12.

Thomas' third touchdown put the game out of reach. He went 53 yards untouched up the middle to put Eastern ahead 28-12 with 2:43 left in the game.

"I knew Western had a defensive back that ran a 4.39 40 (Eddie Godfrey)," he said. "I heard somebody behind me and I just took off as hard as I could for the goal line hoping nobody would catch me."

Eastern added another score when Brooks returned his second interception of the game 61 yards for a touchdown with 1:22 remaining.

Eastern coach Roy Kidd, now 13-13-2 against the Tops, said he knew his club would break loose sooner or later.

"I knew we were the best team," he said. "I just didn't know when we were going to prove it."

Coming into the game, Eastern's offense had been averaging 342 yards a game, 254 yards rushing. The Colonels finished the game with 389 yards rushing and 482 total yards. Thomas led the Colonels with 161 yards on 22 carries and scored three times.

"I thought we'd be able to run it as well as we had been doing," Fields said. "We just stuck with our game plan and came in and

Two offensive standouts sidelined by Colonels

By DONNIE SWINEY

Western lost more than just its football game to Eastern Saturday night — it temporarily lost two offensive standouts.

Those standouts, who have a lot to do with the Toppers' offensive punch, are roommates Milt Biggins and Don Smith, who suffered knee injuries in the Colonels' 35-12 win.

Biggins, a 6-2, 240-pound tight end from Chicago, will have arthroscopic surgery on his left knee at 12:30 p.m. today to repair partially torn cartilage, head trainer Bill Edwards said.

Edwards said Biggins, the man most of Western's plays are directed behind, could be out at least three weeks.

"I don't really think it will be a big letdown," Biggins said. "With it being Homecoming, I really think the guys will still play a good game."

Morris Green, a 6-4, 230-pound senior, will replace Biggins.

Green has played fullback and split end this year and has seven catches for 106 yards. Biggins averages a team-high 19.7 yards a catch, has three catches for 59 yards and the Tops' only reception for a touchdown this season.

Biggins said one of the reasons his injury is so serious is because he continued to play after he got hurt.

"I didn't want to stay out of this game since it was Eastern," he said. "I thought if I could stay in there and do the run blocking I'd be all right. But it was hurting too bad and I couldn't walk on it anymore."

Smith, the team's leading rusher, will miss Saturday's game against Youngstown State because of a sprained ligament in his right knee, Edwards said.

The 5-10, 185-pound senior from Harrodsburg is averaging 125 yards a game. He had 58 yards on seven carries before leaving Saturday's game in the first half.

"As far as me individually, I was having probably my best performance in a long time," Smith said. "I jumped out real fast and I was seeing the holes real good, but it was just one of those freak accidents."

Tops to play No. 2 in nation

By L. B. KISTLER

Western's tough season is about to get tougher.

So far Western has played Midwest power Centenary (L 1-3), Far West standout Cal-Fullerton (T 3-3) and Sun Belt Conference rival UNC-Charlotte (W 1-0).

But they haven't seen anything yet.

Evansville is coming to town.

Tonight the the Tops have a chance to reach two of their preseason goals: a top-five rank in the Great Lakes Region and a win over Evansville, the No. 2 team in the nation.

The Tops (8-1-1) are sixth in the region, their highest rank ever — just one place away from their goal of breaking the top five.

They're riding a string of eight straight wins, their longest ever. But they want to make it nine in a row.

Their only obstacle — the Purple Aces.

The Purple Aces (9-0-2) are first in the Great Lakes Region, and have never lost to Western in eight games.

A win against the Aces will advance the Toppers in the region and give them national prestige, Western coach David Holmes said.

The Purple Aces are known for their tough, physical play. Their offense is aggressive and has the ability to score last minute goals that may mean a one-point victory, defender Tony McCracken said. "They don't give up."

Leading that strong offense is forward David Weir and midfielder Tim Ernst. Weir has 27 points and is the second-leading scorer in the region, and Ernst has 17 points.

Sweeper Rory Lithgow said the big key to stopping Evansville's scorers is not to give away easy goals.

"If we don't concentrate, they'll punish us," Lithgow said. "Their shots usually go in the back of the net."

"We can't give up stupid goals like we did in the beginning of the season," McCracken said. "I think our better team defense will help."

Western defense has seen a definite upward trend in the last few games. After giving up eight goals in the first three games, Western's defense has settled down, allowing two goals in the past seven games.

Chris Poulos is eighth in the region and sixth in the conference in goals against average (1.27). Teammate Mark Freer leads the conference with a .667 GAA.

Their competition, Purple Ace goalkeeper Trey Harrington, has a .27 GAA, making him the leader in the region. He has only allowed three goals.

Harrington's main job will be trying to stop Western's scoring threat, Chris Hutchinson. Since being moved back to forward earlier this season, Hutchinson has come on strong to lead the Tops with nine goals and two assists for 20 points. He is sixth in the region and third in the conference in scoring.

Brian Lewis is closing the gap on Hutchinson. Lewis, also a forward, has scored 17 points. He is tied for eighth in the region and fifth in the conference.

"It's our biggest game of the season," McCracken said. "We need a good performance against them. Our schedule and wins have given us momentum."

"We hope our good attitude will prevail. But we don't need motivation for a team like Evansville."

Knee injury sidelines Anderson for season

Herald staff report

Jerry Anderson, Western's leading returning scorer and rebounder, is expected to miss the basketball season after undergoing knee surgery Saturday afternoon.

Anderson, a 6-8, 205-pound forward, injured the knee in an automobile accident on the Bluegrass Parkway in Woodford County Sept. 19. Arthroscopic surgery Thursday revealed extensive ligament damage.

He decided to have further surgery at the Medical Center at Bowling Green and will be out at least six months.

Anderson, who averaged 12.3 points and 5.5 rebounds per game last season, had not been released as of 6 p.m. yesterday.

Anderson, a senior from Brooklyn, N.Y., was traveling west when he lost control of his 1989 car. The car crossed the median into the eastbound lane and struck a truck, Woodford County police reported.

Anderson was treated at Woodford Memorial Hospital and released five days later.

Coach gives Bradley the chance to prove herself

By MARSHA BURTON

When Coach Jeff Hulsmeier talked to Cindy Bradley over the summer after she expressed interest in transferring to Western to play, he not only hadn't seen her play but he also didn't know what to expect from her.

Later in the summer, Bradley came to Bowling Green to compete in a tournament, and Hulsmeier got to see her in action.

The sophomore setter from Evansville, Ind., was on a team opposite Hulsmeier and he was impressed by her athletic ability.

At Indiana, Bradley had tried out for the team but did not make it. But Hulsmeier gave her a chance to play.

And he hasn't regretted his decision.

"It's a major improvement (having Bradley on the team) for the team because she has a lot of confidence and they are beginning to trust in her," he said.

Bradley said the major reason she wanted to leave Indiana was because she was unhappy there. "I couldn't find a niche I belonged in at Indiana," Bradley said.

But Bradley has found her niche at Western. Bradley leads the team in set assists and has been named to three all-tournament teams.

When Bradley transferred, she didn't expect to become a starter or even get a lot of playing time. So she set a goal to become the starting setter for Western.

"I was basically coming in knowing that I would do my best," Bradley said.

And Hulsmeier is hoping that the team, led by Michelle

VOLLEYBALL

Mingus and Bradley, will do well when Western goes to Tennessee Tech today.

In the Sept. 4 meeting between the two teams, it took Western five games to win the match.

Bradley said she thinks the team will play more aggressively because "we went five games with them the first time. Everyone was frustrated with that."

Hulsmeier said he expects a tougher match. "What I plan to do against them is work our left side. They have two main hitters and we have to try and shut them down."

This weekend, Western took first place in the Topper Tourney.

During the two-day tournament, the Lady Tops lost only one game and improved their record to 12-4.

Two Lady Tops were named to the all-tournament team — Becky Davis and Bradley, who was named tourney MVP.

In the first match, the Lady Tops beat Middle Tennessee in three straight games — 15-4, 15-4 and 15-11.

On Saturday, Western first played Tennessee State — the only match where the Lady Tops lost a game.

The Lady Tops took care of TSU in four games — 15-4, 10-15, 15-2 and 15-11.

Western beat Austin Peay 15-9, 15-3 and 15-7.

Bradley led the team with 17 digs, 40 set assists and two block assists.

In the finals, the Lady Tops beat Xavier 15-11, 15-13 and 15-9.

Coach returns after 30 years

By BART SUMMAR

When Norman Head, last season's Sun Belt Conference golf Coach of the Year, asked Lee Robertson to replace him as coach this year, Robertson thought he was joking.

Although Robertson had coached high school football, basketball, track and baseball — he hadn't coached in 30 years and had never coached golf.

"It's been so long since I coached last, that it all just seems brand new," said Robertson, 68.

"More than anything, I'm just out to gain the respect of these players," he said.

"Nobody tries as hard as he does," Louisville senior Eric Hogge said.

Matt Fender, a senior from Mt. Pleasant, Mich., said that the coaching transition has gone smoothly. Head is still with the team as an assistant coach.

"Coach Robertson gets along with us really well," Fender said. "He loves Western and would do anything for us. Of the two coaches, Coach Robertson is more like a dad."

Robertson said he feels a responsibility for his players.

"They need to know what I stand for," Robertson said, pointing out that he emphasizes attending classes ahead of playing golf.

Robertson played baseball under Coach E. A. Diddle before graduating in 1950 and beginning his coaching career at Park City High.

While at Park City, he coached Van Vance, the voice of the Louisville Cardinals.

"He was one of the better athletes I ever coached," Robertson said. "He was 6-3 and boney. He was the center on our basketball team and an end on the football team."

In 1952, Robertson moved to Livermore High in McLean County to coach and later became principal there.

Robertson was a school superintendent in Barren County before becoming director of Alumni Affairs at Western in 1960.

After retiring in 1985, Robertson and Charles Keown, former dean of student affairs, went to Florida to conduct an international marketing study.

He traveled all across the nation while testing the market for a new type of circuit breaker.

"We were successful because we were relaxed," Robertson said. "If I had been 25 years old and had to provide for a family, I probably could have never been able to do the things I did."

Robertson said that although he is proud of his work in Florida, he became unhappy being away from his wife Joyce in Kentucky.

"My wife would come down to visit a lot and say that I was the most unhappy person she'd ever been around."

In 1988, Robertson accepted an offer from former president Kern Alexander to become the interim director at Western's Glasgow campus until a permanent director was hired.

After that, Robertson lived in Bowling Green, working for a travel agency putting together foreign travel packages for college alumni associations.

He said that it's ironic to be back coaching where he went to school.

Even after all his successes, Robertson said he's still uncertain whether coaching golf will be another.

"Only time will tell how all this will turn out."

O'Carroll gains from comeback

By BRIAN DAUGHERTY

Although Western had only six runners — one woman and five men — in the Cardinal Invitational Saturday in Louisville, one had some success.

Sophomore Edward O'Carroll, making a comeback from a back injury, finished seventh in the men's race at Joe Creason Park.

However, Western didn't register a team score in men's competition, as Chris Chmielewski got sick halfway into the five mile meet.

CROSS COUNTRY

When Chmielewski dropped out of the race, Western was left one short of the five runners required to be eligible for team competition.

Louisville won the men's meet by one point over Eastern Kentucky 59-60. Eastern's Rob Colvin set a course record in 25 minutes and 57 seconds, while former Western runner Hendrick Mako was second in 26:36.

O'Carroll finished in 27:07. "It was encouraging (that) he was able to run competitively," said Coach Cartiss Long.

James Scott finished 22nd in 27:51, followed by Charles Knight (56th in 29:17) and Bryan Kessler (58th in 29:27).

Eastern and Louisville tied for first place in women's competition 32-32. Eastern's Carena Winters, one of four Lady Colonels in the top seven, finished first in 18:33.

Susan Rankin, the only Western runner in the meet, ran unattached and finished 29th in 20:59.

Tops lose 2 starters to injuries

"I've been playing football since I was 8 years old, and I've never had any broken bones or serious injuries. The good Lord has really blessed me."

Coach Jack Harbaugh said injuries are part of the game. "Every team in the country has injuries. But it's the teams that rally around their other players that win."

played ball."

"We came out playing hard in the second half and tried not to make mistakes, but we really missed a lot of tackles... that's what hurt us," Godfrey said.

The Toppers (2-2) led 9-7 at halftime on three Donisi field goals. His fourth later broke Dan Maher's school record of three in a game.

But despite rolling up 346 yards on offense, Western could not put the ball in the end zone.

"Mathematically, you can't settle for three when you're in the red zone (inside the opponent's 30-yard line)," Coach Jack Harbaugh said, "because eventually it's going to catch you."
